Hi Paul

The article that was in last week's newsletter about Joe Kearney and the APR-9 microwave receiver, hit a nerve with me because the APR-9 gave me my first acquaintance with Airborne Instruments Laboratory (AIL). It influenced my joining AIL in 1955. In the early 1950's I was an engineer working for the Navy at the old Brooklyn Navy Yard and was asked to look into problems with an external cavity klystron vacuum tube that was used in a tunable local oscillator in the APR-9. I had to certify that the klystron supplier was now meeting specifications. In the course of this, I met Joe Kearney and got familiar with the APR-9. I also gained a favorable impression of AIL.

By mid-1955, I decided to change jobs and high on my list of places to go to was AIL. I was interviewed by the late Bob Aylward and was hired and joined the Special Systems and Components Department headed by Eugene Fubini and really got to know and admire Joe Kearney.
